

Process for Calling Pastors to Congregations in East Central Synod of Wisconsin

Introduction

The calling of pastors grows out of our Lutheran understanding of the call to specific ministries. We believe that the call is the integration of three elements: personal, community/congregational, and catholic. In other words, we believe the call involves a person's own discernment of call to the ministry involved, a community or congregation extending a call to a specific ministry, and the affirmation of the church catholic with whom we work as partners in the specificity of time and place.

Because the call to a specific pastoral ministry is a call into a relationship of service to the gospel, the call process works best when congregations and pastors are centered on the gospel and its proclamation in the time and place of ministry. The call process, then, is the culmination of the work during a transition period through which the congregation has identified its ministry, gifts, and vision and now focuses on the selection of a pastor who will be with the congregation as it goes about the ministry to which it is called.

It is recommended that all ELCA rostered pastors consider themselves "open to call" and that they keep their mobility forms current in the Bishop's office. The names of pastors to be presented to a congregation may come to the attention of the Bishop by means such as self nomination, nomination by members of the calling body, recommendations of other Synod Bishops, and the active file of mobility maintained by the Bishop of this synod. When the Bishop contacts a pastor about a particular call, a time of discernment begins for that pastor. A willingness to participate in a call process should be seen as a willingness of the pastor to prayerfully discern God's call to ministry, just as it is a time of a congregation's discernment of its ministry. It should not be assumed that a pastor engaging the process is seeking to move, only to discern God's call to ministry.

A pastoral vacancy in a congregation affords that congregation also a period of discernment, a time for reflection and prayer on its mission and ministry. This period has been identified as a time of opportunity as well as challenge. Therefore the specific task of calling a pastor is but one part of the transition period between called pastors. The Congregation Council should intentionally provide leadership to the congregation during this transition period, encouraging strong bonds of unity and trust in God, and exercising sensitive care for all the people of the congregation. This important time of transition is a time of self-discovery, decision making, and looking ahead. The Bishop, will support the congregation in transition and will encourage the congregation to appoint an Interim Pastor to more effectively carry out these responsibilities.

It is the Holy Spirit that "calls, gathers, enlightens, sanctifies and keeps us united in faith." So it is expected that every step of the vacancy period and call process be surrounded by prayer.

 - c) When the congregation affirms the Bishop's Associate's suggestion, it engages in an Interim Ministry Covenant with its selected Interim Pastor. The Synod Council then affirms the selection by issuing an Interim Covenant.
 - d) The Congregation Council shall provide an opportunity for an exit interview with the departing pastor.
 - e) The congregation may establish a Transition Team from among its members to work with the Congregation Council to guide and direct the study of vision, ministry and pastoral needs in preparation of the Ministry Site Profile.

The Bishop's Associate shall inform the Call Committee of other interviews of which he/she is aware at the time the Bishop's Associate presents the names. If a nominee has been selected by the Call Committee for congregational vote and chooses to continue in that process, the nominee must withdraw from all other processes.

- d) Nominees shall inform the Bishop's Associate of involvement in all career/job search activities and shall keep the Bishop's Associate informed of the status of their interviews.

 - a) The Call Committee may release all of the nominees it has interviewed. After consulting with the Bishop's Associate, the Committee may request an additional slate of nominees. The same process for interviewing and selecting shall be followed. The Call committee may also invite nominees back for second interviews to further discern a possible call. Second interviews should be done face to face at church's expense for travel.
 - b) The Call Committee may request a nominee it has previously interviewed only when all other nominees have been released.
